Our Finishings

We have five types of special processing...

Brushed Bush Hammered

Bush Hammer stone is one of the stones whose surface will be rough due to the presence of axes, and the possibility of its slipping will disappear. This stone is used in building floors, paving the area and exterior spaces, interior and exterior of buildings, etc.

Grooved

All kinds of groove processing can be done on our stones, which creates a new appearance and texture of the stone by creating regular lines with a certain distance from each other. Stones with various groove processing can be used individually or in combination with other stones and even in combination with other materials.

SandBlasted

Sandblasting provides a different appearance by creating a rough and non-slip surface. In its conventional method, special materials such as sand or silica are sprayed on the stone surface through wind pumps. Due to the pressure these materials have when sprayed, the surface of the stone takes on a texture with hollows and shallow holes.

Polished

Polished processing is a kind of stone surface processing in which the stone surface becomes shiny and reflects light like glass or mirror. This operation is created by a polishing machine and abrasive bits.

Handmade Hammered

The first finish applied by man to the stone is called handmade hammered stone. Handmade hammering stone process is still common in the market and is used in stairs, facades, floors, landscaping, foundations. In this processing, by hitting the surface of the stone, nail-shaped scratches are created on it, which causes the surface to become rough, as a result, the friction of the surface increases, and in addition to reducing the surface's slipperiness, it also makes the stone brighter.

PATTERN

Neyriz sandblasted stone has a non-slip surface with a special texture. Sandblast creates a rough surface on the stone by creating small and shallow holes. Sandblast processing in Dormika is done in a different way using diamond tools. Sandblasting was generally done with sandblasting, but with the updating of equipment and devices, new methods replaced it. The lack of clarity of the gray color of reed stone after sandblasting adds to the uniformity and uniformity of the white color of the stone.
